"THE RED MEN'S MENACE"

The disappearance of Ruth with the mysterious White Rider causes great consternation. Indians and cowboys follow, but the chase ends at a closed trail. The White Rider takes her to his home in solid rock, entrance to which is through a secret door in a giant tree. Not knowing whether he is a friend or foe, she escapes by sliding down a rope from a high window. She seeks food in the hut of Stone Ear, a deaf mute, but fear drives her out. Phil finds her and, by a trick, they escape the Indians.

Ruth decides to go back to Frisco, but Loomis plots against her. They cause her to reach the depot after the train has started. She rides to a nearby platform and leaps onto the speeding train. The door to the car is locked and she is at the mercy of a ruffian, who jumps from his horse to the train. Ruth climbs onto the roof, and, after a fight with the cowboy, she leaps to the ground.
